City of Boulder City Presents Financial Awareness Seminar Series

The City of Boulder City, in cooperation with the Society for Financial Awareness, a non-profit educational speaker's bureau, is proud to announce the monthly offering of financial seminars, free and open to the public. On the third Tuesday of each month, various financial topics will be presented by professionals licensed in their particular field.

The next seminar, "Getting Fiscally Fit," will be presented on Tuesday, April 20, 2010, at 12 noon in the Council Chambers of City Hall, 401 California Avenue. Speaker will be David Greene who will discuss basic principles of cash management, accumulating wealth, locating and maximizing discretionary income, the importance of having a financial blueprint and roadblocks to financial success.

This workshop, as well as all others in the series, present general educational information and are not sales presentations or company recommendations or product or service representations. All information presented is generic and geared toward financial issues commonly faced by the public. All presentations are in the form of a workshop and allow ample time for questions from participants.

Since space is limited, please call Personnel Administrator Bryce Boldt at 293-9203 or e-mail your RSVP for a seat to bboldt@bcnv.org. Check the City's web calendar at www.bcnv.org for topics scheduled through November 16, 2010.
